Bon Voyage

This young lady, Kathryn Lynch, came to San Francisco this week to bid bon voyage, or words to that effect, to 25,000 boxes of Sebastopol, Calif., apples consigned on the motor ship Amerika for Germany, Denmark, Sweden and other European ports. This, the largest single shipment of California apples to leave San Francisco harbor, is the forerunner of an expected export of a million boxes this season.

Pacific Crest Is Attractive Spot

In a setting of rare beauty that symbolizes peace and hope, Pacific Crest Mausoleum and Cemetery, near Hawthorne boulevard and Electric street, a few miles from Torrance, creates an atmosphere that is unusually attractive and should be the basis of further beautification of this resting place.

Pacific Crest Mausoleum has an interior of beautiful marble and bronze, with the bronze tint effectively used in general color scheme of this dignified building. Everything connected with the cemetery, the columbarium, chapel, crematory and grounds, has been designed with subtle grace that expels the usual suggestions of sorrow and loss. Visitors are cordially invited to inspect the conveniences at Pacific Crest, according to J. E. Calhoun, vice president and general manager of the company.

New Motor for Tokio Plane

Undaunted by their failure to make a non-stop flight from Seattle to Tokio on their first attempt, Reg Robbins and H. S. Jones are going to make another hop. Photo shows Robbins (left) and his mechanic, Mike Pavone, installing a larger motor in the Fort Worth. With more speed assured this time, the Texas flyers hope to make the hop with only one refueling in the air instead of two as in the first attempt.

SOME 138 LODI—Paving of Cherokee lane began July 13, exactly 13 days after city dads ordered the paving district. The resolution was passed April 13 and the contract let May 13.

Here's More About High Priced Gas Propaganda AN EDITORIAL

(Continued From Page 1-A) In the California and Midcontinent oil fields the question of surplus gasoline and refined products has become a serious topic of discussion wherever oil men gather. Both of these great producing areas have watched helplessly in the last year or so while competitive oil from newer fields has boldly captured marketing territory heretofore undisputed.

From Venezuela, Rumania and Russia, oil has poured into the European market on which California and midcontinent producers relied for absorption of surplus gasoline and refined products. At the same time a new attack struck at the domestic markets when the Gulf Coast fields, principally East Texas, unloaded another flood of oil.

Exports Sharply Off
As the result of this competition, the California and Midcontinent producers now find the export market virtually lost. Plentiful supplies from the foreign fields, located closer to the European marketing centers, have depressed prices to the point where it is unprofitable for American companies to compete. Most of them still retain their place, but the export figures show that American representation is only nominal.

Loss of the export business drew a relatively narrow circle around the markets still open to Midcontinent and California oil. The great domestic markets in the Middle West and along the Atlantic seaboard still were natural outlets for Midcontinent producers, while California continued to regard the Atlantic seaboard as a market for a substantial volume of California gasoline.

The challenge came from the Gulf Coast fields and from Venezuela. Gradually cheap oil from these centers drifted in, the South American production almost imperceptibly driving back Midcontinent products from the seaboard and seriously interfering with the shipments of gasoline from California. Hurriedly built pipe-line systems at the same time were transporting the new Gulf Coast surplus up into the interior markets and down to tide water for shipment to the Atlantic seaboard.

Circle Narrowed
Midcontinent producers now find the circle restricted to the North Central States, principally Illinois and Indiana, as the normal market for Oklahoma and Kansas crude oil. The local refineries in these sections are taking the production sufficient to supply the smaller marketing area, and wells that formerly produced oil for the whole area east of the Rockies are either shut down or sharply curtailed. North Texas, Oklahoma and Kansas crude, for example, moves to Chicago at a cost of 68 cents a barrel, compared with 76 cents for crude from East Texas.

California's situation is no better. Having lost its export business and having been practically driven out of the Atlantic seaboard, producers in this state must revise their ideas and produce only for the Pacific Slope. Undoubtedly California as a source of crude oil supply has lost ground in the international petroleum picture, at least while current conditions obtain.

Perhaps these readjustments explain a number of shifts in recent oil company policy. Some of the larger, as the Jersey and California Standard companies, have quietly diversified activities by investing capital in related or other enterprises. Others have elected to concentrate on internal improvements calculated to place the investment on a profitable basis under changed conditions.

Maybe So, Maybe So

Melvin Koontz, animal doctor, is supposed to be extracting a faulty molar from the jaws of Jackie, famous wrestling lion of Luna Park zoo, Los Angeles, while Judith Wood, Hollywood film-mis, stands by to lend moral support. It's a good bet that Mel didn't get the tooth, but, anyway, we don't envy his proximity to Jackie's yawning mouth.
